Jackson's Wedding.
The following scene is from the Early Days of Jefferson, in the New York Century.
"Jefferson, that noble and brave man, had been married many years, and his old admirer was approaching thirty, when he met a young lady of twenty-two, who had produced a strong impression upon him. She was a little above the medium height, slender, with a delicate tint of the rose; large hazel eyes, full of life and feeling, and luxuriant hair of a rich, soft auburn, framed a countenance of attractions which were eminently calculated to move the heart of a young man. In addition to all this the lady was admirably graceful; she danced and moved with elegant ease, and sang and played on the harpichord very sweetly.
"The first of these accomplishments, the possession of excellent good sense, very considerable cultivation, a warm, loving heart, and last, though not least, noble talents for housekeeping, and it will not be difficult to understand how the youthful Mr. Jefferson came to visit very frequently at the lady's residence, in the county of Charles City. It was called 'The Forest,' and the name of the lady was Mrs. Martha Skelton. She was a daughter of John Wales, an eminent lawyer and had married in her seventeenth year Mr. Nathaniel Skelton, who dying in 1768, left his young wife a widow of nineteen. As the three years of mourning began to expire, the beautiful young lady found herself besieged at home by the numerous suitors. Of these three were favorites with the fair Mrs. Skelton, of whom Mr. Thomas Jefferson was one. The tradition runs that the pretensions of the rivals were decided either by the musical accompaniment of the young ladies, or by the result of his opponents. The tale is differently related.
The version is, that the two unfortunate gentle-women encountered each other on Mrs. Skelton's door-step, but neither's violin and harpichord voice accompanying the lady in a pathetic song, gave up the contest therefor, and retired with out entering, convinced that the affair was beyond their control.
"The story is, that all three met at the door and agreed that they would take turns. Mr. Jefferson entered first, and the tones of the lady in singing with her companion deprived the listeners of all hope. However, that may be, it is certain that the lady who had consented to be defeated by Mr. Jefferson, and on the first of January, 1771, there was a great festival at 'The Forest.'
Friends and kindred assembled from far and near --there was dancing and singing after the manner of the day, and the host from the lady's own room took the 'sevens and eights' received from her husband's pocket.
"It snowed without, but with all her mildness and enjoyment, in the light and warmth of the great fire, during the hour of the evening. She after the performance of the ceremony, the bridegroom and his bride set out in their carriage for "Monticello," where Mr. J. Skelton had commenced building in 1769, just before the departure of his wife, and the house of "Shu-se-d." The journey was not to end without adventure. As they advanced toward the mountains, the snow increased in depth, and finally they were compelled to leave the carriage and traverse the road on foot. The bridegroom, who was a man of courage and good sense, and did not care for inconvenience. It was late when they arrived, and a cheerful reception awaited them.
--or rather, there was no reception at all. The door was closed, and the servants had gone to bed and the piece was as dark and silent as the grave.
Contacting his wife to the little pavilion, which was the only part of the house habitable at the time, Mr. Jefferson and his bride entered. The lady, who had been told that the house was inhabited, and which she had seen in the distance, was discovered, and this formed the supper of the bridegroom and the bride. For from being annoyed or disappointed by the reception, however, it only served for a topic of jest and laughter. The young lady was merry and light-hearted as a bird, and sent her clear voice ringing through the dreary little pavilion as gaily as she had ever done in the cheerful drawing room of "the Forest." The bridegroom, who had been told that the house was inhabited, and which he had seen in the distance, was discovered, and this formed the supper of the bridegroom and the bride. For from being annoyed or disappointed by the reception, however, it only served for a topic
